

As an orthopaedic trauma surgeon working at Westchester Medical Center, I am experienced in treating complex periarticular and pelvic fractures as well as managing the resulting complications. On a weekly basis, we see the impact that trauma has on patients and their loved ones. My partners and I have a motivated interest in advancing the field of orthopaedic trauma management. I grew up in North Carolina and attended Duke University for my undergraduate education. I then graduated from The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Medicine and completed residency at Northwestern University in Chicago, IL. After completing a Trauma Fellowship under Dr. David Helfet, I joined the faculty at HSS, where I stayed until 2019. I have been at Westchester Medical Center since 2019, where I serve as the Program Director and Medical Director of Orthopaedic Trauma.
