

Richard S. Yoon, MD is Clinical Professor of Orthopaedic Surgery at the Rutgers-Robert Wood Johnson Medical School. After graduating from Rutgers-New Jersey Medical School, he completed his orthopaedic training at NYU – Hospital for Joint Diseases and went on to complete a combined trauma/arthroplasty fellowship at Orlando Health. He was also selected as an AOTrauma Davos Fellow, and has subsequently gone on to become Fellowship Director as well as Director of Orthopaedic Research at Rutgers/RWJBH-Jersey City Orthopaedic Surgery Program. He remains active in the AAOS, AAHKS, and OTA as he continues to contribute to clinical research and trainee education.

Dr. Yoon has published over 150 peer-reviewed articles along with several book chapters and books. He has presented numerous times on both the national and international stage and has been the recipient of multiple teaching and research awards as he continues his young career and dedication to the field of orthopaedic surgery