

Michael Darowish is an orthopedic hand and upper extremity surgeon at Penn State Milton S. Hershey Medical Center, where he has practiced since 2009. A graduate of Williams College (Go Ephs!), he matriculated to the University of Pittsburgh Medical School. Following graduation, he completed his orthopedic surgery residency, including a year-long research fellowship at the University of Rochester. He then served as a hand fellow at the Cleveland Combined Hand Fellowship. In addition to his clinical hand and upper extremity practice, Dr. Darowish serves as the Vice Chair for Quality and Patient Safety for the department. Outside of work you can find him with his wife and two children, playing board games, listening to music, reading, or doing a middle-aged version of “running.”