

Harold Fogel, MD is a board-certified orthopedic spine surgeon and a clinical instructor of Orthopedic Surgery at Harvard Medical School. He currently serves as Fellowship Director of the Massachusetts General Hospital & Brigham and Women's Hospital Orthopedic Spine Surgery Fellowship. Dr. Fogel received his undergraduate degree from the University of Michigan and attended Chicago Medical School where he earned his MD with Distinction in Research. He completed his orthopedic surgery residency at Loyola University Medical Center in Chicago. He specialized in spine surgery by completing the Orthopedic Spine Surgery Fellowship at Massachusetts General Hospital & Brigham and Women's Hospital followed by a traveling fellowship at the University of New South Wales in Sydney, Australia.

Dr. Fogel has a special interest in patient safety and quality improvement and currently serves as Course Director of the Mass General Brigham Department of Orthopaedic Surgery Morbidity and Mortality Conference. His research interests include value-based healthcare, quality improvement, and cannabinoids in orthopedic surgery.